Newspaper resources you can use to discover amazing stories about your ancestors lives.

Old newspapers hold a wealth of information about the lives and deaths of our ancestors. Headlines, news and obituaries appear side-by-side with society columns and patent application notices. Community pages include everything from who is visiting, to lost farm animals. Advertisements offer a fascinating glimpse at prices, styles, and interests of the time. Unlike official government documents, the information found in newspapers was generally recorded because it was what people of the time found important. Newspapers provide a fascinating glimpse into our ancestors lives.

To find old newspapers we have two options. We can use traditional methods that have been used for many years or use newer electronic resources. In either case it is helpful to first develop a timeline of showing when our family lived in each location. Then try to determine all possible newspapers that existed at that time.

Where will you find old newspapers? The answers are numerous but begin by exploring local resources near where your ancestor lived. Libraries, Historical Societies, Genealogical Societies, Universities, State or Regional Archives and newspaper clipping files held by any of the above.

Today there are many online resources to help you identify what newspapers existed and where copies may be found. There are even web sites that provide digitized copies of newspapers that can be searched easily for keywords or phrases. Some are provided free while others may charge a fee.

Let's begin by taking a look at some local resources.
